Pope Francis has said that he would like to send pilgrims to places where people have no other recourse than to sell their body parts to survive. In an interview with Jesuit journal Civiltà Cattolica, published on Wednesday, the Pope suggested that the church could ease poverty and the crisis of migration in Europe by helping migrants “to regain a sense of dignity” and “respecting their human dignity,” starting with the clothes they put on. “In many countries, they do not have clothes because they have sold their flesh to survive. That happens in Africa, and I would like the Church to help them to regain a sense of dignity and respect for their human dignity,” said the Pope. “You see them on the street, they have no clothes, and I think that some of you have asked yourselves: ‘What would I do if my wife and my children had no clothes?’ The answer is the same as in Africa: you would cover them with a piece of cloth and you would go on your way.” Mr. Francis appeared to be specifically referring to migrants from Syria, Afghanistan, Iraq, Sudan and Eritrea, who have been sent to refugee camps in Italy after arriving in Italy. “They have no home, they have no country,” said the Pope. “They are transported, and we cannot know where they were transported from. So if there is a shipwreck, they die for sure. There are many things that happen that we do not know. And how can the Church not help them, because one of the main points is the dignity of human beings?” Pilgrims are used to living on the cheap during pilgrimages to the Holy Land, said Mr. Francis, and he said that the Church could help to alleviate the crisis of migration. “You know that we do not have so many pilgrim destinations now compared to what there were in the past,” he said. “The crowd is there, but this crowd is in Europe, and the Church cannot just leave them there, it would be a very sad thing. In fact, the crowd that passes through Rome and then goes to Bari, and then to Lampedusa, often there are not many tourists passing through, there are more and more people from Africa who want to get into Europe. “What can we do? The Pope would

Q: How to get a GKMatch object I would like to use a GKMatch. What I want to achieve is getting a GKMatch object from a GKMatchDelegate. I have a scene which will be running in the foreground of another scene (the one I would like to create and get a match from), I have registered my delegate as it's delegate. I call: [self.matchDelegate sendMatch:match]; And I get a: "Caller must implement a matching match delegate for the given context." I have implemented a match delegate like this: @protocol MyMatchDelegate - (void)sendMatch:(GKMatch *)match; @end But it seems that I am not doing it correctly. Any help would be appreciated. A: The only method you need to implement in your Match Delegate is: - (void)sendMatch:(GKMatch *)match; After that, in your parent view controller, add the matchdelegate to your scene: matchdelegate = [[MatchDelegate alloc] init]; scene.matchDelegate = matchdelegate; And then, whenever you want to send a match, simply call: [matchDelegate sendMatch:match]; When you implement this method, make sure that you conform to the GKMatchDelegate protocol as well. Hope this helps! A: That is correct. UNPUBLISHED UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT No. 18-6881 UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Petitioner -
